Conversion of seismic data from its native time domain to the depth domain requires some prediction of seismic velocity in the subsurface. This page presents very general examples of such predictions, or velocity models. These are two-dimensional models; modern work would require models in three dimensions.